

Do you know Revel?

Art

There it is. And there. And there.

When your student lights up because they just got it. You watch it in real time, and you can't get enough of it. Let's make it happen more often.

Enter Revel. A digital learning platform that makes your students feel the connection between their classroom and the world.

Revel doesn't just bring learning to life; it brings real life to learning.

Art is created to be experienced, and your students can have that opportunity, no matter where they are. Let's take a look at Revel Art.

Architectural Panoramas provide an immersive, 360-degree experience that brings students into the settings of major buildings and monuments, breaking down geographical barriers and showing each site within its cultural context.

3D Animations demonstrate historic architectural and artistic techniques, as well as complex processes and methods, in ways that students can more easily comprehend.

Pan/Zooms let students zoom in and out of a work of art without losing the image's clarity and resolution, allowing them to see connections between the entire piece and its individual details. The scale attribute provides viewers with a sense of the size of what they are studying, helping them gain a better understanding of the work and its essential concepts.

Closer Look videos guide students through a slow-looking exercise for each work of art, highlighting key points of style, technique, subject matter, and cultural context. "The skull, placed between the viewer and the ambassadors in what is known as an anamorphic projection, suggests that the two men understand the fate that awaits us all." (Quote from a Closer Look video about Hans Holbein's The Ambassadors painting)

Embedded listening guides with streaming audio are available for courses that include Humanities. Each listening guide has a timestamped summary of key parts of the music where new instruments, melodies, or themes are called out. This allows students to "see" the important changes in the music as they hear them.

Revel inspires and empowers students to apply their learning, not just in your course, but in their lives today, and their future careers.
